Purpose and Summary

H.R. 5720, the “Courthouse Ethics and Transparency Act,” closes two loopholes exempting federal judicial officers from key provisions of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, as amended by the STOCK Act of 2012. First, H.R. 5720 extends the STOCK Act’s requirement that senior government officials disclose securities transactions in excess of $1,000 within 30 to 45 days to judicial officers. Second, H.R. 5720 requires the Administrative Office of the United States Courts to make all judicial financial disclosure reports available in a publicly accessible online database in a full-text searchable, sortable, and downloadable format not later than 90 days after the reports are required to be filed.

These reforms will make disclosure reports easier for the public to monitor and analyze, which would allow for increased transparency to better effectuate the purposes of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978—“to preserve and promote the integrity of public officials and institutions”—as well as the principal federal judicial recusal statute, 28 U.S.C. § 455.¹

Background and Need for the Legislation

A. Recent Evidence of Violations of the Federal Judicial Disqualification Statute

Federal law prohibits judges and justices from hearing cases in which they or their families have a “legal or equitable interest, however small” in order to promote confidence in the judiciary.² However, according to the Wall Street Journal, since 2010, more than 130 federal judges failed to recuse themselves from 685 court cases involving companies in which they or their families had a financial interest, and approximately two-thirds of the judges’ rulings were decided in favor of the party in which they or their families held an interest.³

In 173 cases, the judges’ financial interests exceeded $15,000, and, of those cases, 21 totaled over $50,000.⁴ Sixty-one judges or their families traded shares of companies while ruling on cases in which those companies were parties.⁵ When questioned about these violations by the Wall Street Journal, responses by the judges ranged from blaming court clerks and misspellings that went undetected by the judiciary’s conflict-screening software to only having minor roles in the cases and not having a role in the trading since the stocks were in a managed account or trust.⁶ Of the 61 judges whose brokers or family members actively traded shares of the parties in their courtrooms as their lawsuits were progressing, many made several thousands of dollars in profits on those trades.⁷

The Wall Street Journal’s investigation followed a number of previous reports over the past two decades that judges had failed to recuse in cases where they had a financial conflict.⁸ Additionally, one expert explained to the Committee that the Journal’s findings are:

surely a major undercount: The Journal’s work focused on district and appellate court judges, and excluded magistrate and bankruptcy judges; their work focused mainly on individual stock holdings, to the exclusion of the many other types of investments judges can hold; and their work was based on case captions (e.g., “Albatross v. Loon”), not full party lists, which would expose numerous other parties—and conflicts—in a case.⁹

B. Applicable Law

1. Periodic Transaction Reports

The Ethics in Government Act of 1978 requires most high-level government officials in all branches, including judicial officers and judicial employees, to file annual financial disclosure reports.¹⁰ Federal officials other than judicial officers and employees must also supplement the disclosures provided by their annual filings with interim disclosures if they have made significant changes to their financial holdings. Under the STOCK Act, legislative and executive branch officials must file Periodic Transaction Reports (PTRs) disclosing transactions involving stocks, bonds, and other securities that exceed $1,000 within 45 (and in some cases, 30) days of the transaction.¹¹

H.R. 5720 applies these same requirements to all judicial officers.

2. Public Access to Financial Disclosure Reports

Pursuant to the 2012 STOCK Act, Legislative Branch financial disclosure reports are readily available online, as are the President’s, the Vice President’s, and all executive officials compensated at level I and II of the Executive Schedule (generally, all Cabinet officials, Deputy Secretaries, and the heads of most executive and independent agencies).¹² But this STOCK Act disclosure requirement does not apply to judicial officers and employees.

Instead, pursuant to the Ethics in Government Act, judicial officers’ and employees’ financial disclosures must merely be provided to “any person” who requests them.¹³ In the absence of an explicit statutory mandate to act quickly or employ prevailing technology, the Judicial Conference of the United States has implemented a process under which obtaining judicial branch financial disclosures can take months or even years.¹⁴

¹⁰ See 5 U.S.C. App. § 102; § 109(10) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 defines “judicial officer” to include the Chief Justice and Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, as well as the “judges” of the courts of appeals (which includes circuit judges) and the district courts (which includes district judges and bankruptcy judges), as well as a list of Article I courts. When this language was enacted, district judges comprised the only “judges of . . . the district courts.” The remaining senior judicial branch officials are “judicial employees” under § 109(8).

¹¹ 5 U.S.C. App. § 103(1).

¹² See generally STOCK Act, Pub. L. No. 112–105 (2012) (codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. App. 4 § 101).

¹³ 5 U.S.C. § 105(b)(1).

¹⁴ See generally Judicial Ethics and Transparency: The Limits of Existing Statutes and Rules, supra note 9; See A.U.S. GOVT ACCOUNTABILITY OFF., GAO-18-406, FEDERAL JUDICIARY: THE ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE OF THE U.S. COURTS SHOULD ENSURE FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REDACTION REPORTS ARE SUBMITTED TO CONGRESS ANNUALLY (2018), <https://www.gao.gov/assets/700/692168.pdf>; see also William Palin, Free Law Project Creates the First Online Database of Federal Judicial Financial Disclosures, FREE L. PROJECT (Sept. 28, 2021), <https://free.law/2021/09/28/announcing-federal-financial-disclosures> (“We expect to receive and process the majority of the 2019 disclosures in the coming weeks.”).

The current process for obtaining judicial branch financial disclosure reports works as follows. First, a request form must be submitted to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts (AOUSC). Second, the justice or judge whose financial disclosure report has been requested is notified of the request and of the identity of the requester.¹⁵ Third, the justice or judge may then propose redactions to the copy of their financial disclosure report to be provided to the requester; these proposed redactions are then evaluated by AOUSC staff. These request-specific redactions are in addition to the redactions judges are permitted to make when they initially file their financial disclosure reports (officials in other branches are not permitted to make such redactions).¹⁶ Fourth, if a justice or judge objects to providing the requester with the report, that objection is evaluated by a committee of the Judicial Conference.¹⁷ Finally, the disclosures are given to the requester in either hard copy or on a thumb drive.¹⁸ Although financial disclosures are generally submitted in a text-searchable format, the copies on the thumb drive were until this year provided in an image format that renders the disclosures unsearchable.¹⁹

H.R. 5720 would make financial disclosures available online within 90 days of the date they must be filed.

C. Impact of the Current Judicial Financial Disclosure System on Judicial Recusal

The deficiencies in the current financial disclosure system make it difficult for litigants and the public to assess whether a judge or justice is in compliance with their statutory and ethical recusal requirements. Both the fact that judges are exempt from the periodic disclosure report provisions of the STOCK Act as well as the long delays in the request process for annual financial disclosure reports prevent litigants from requesting and receiving relevant financial information in enough time to alert a justice or judge that they must recuse themselves at an early stage of the case, or to challenge the judge's decision not to do so. In addition, the request process itself alerts the justice or judge that a litigant is seeking his or her financial disclosure report; in practice, this notification process can have a substantial chilling effect, deterring litigants from seeking such disclosures lest they upset the justice or judge overseeing their case.

D. Intended Operation of H.R. 5720

H.R. 5720 is intended to strengthen existing measures meant to ensure the appearance of impartiality that is essential to judicial legitimacy. Requirements for the disclosure of personal financial interests, in addition to strict requirements for recusal in the event of a conflict with those financial interests, help to assure litigants that their cases will be heard by a neutral, disinterested arbiter and resolved on their individual merits, which increases public acceptance of the outcomes of our judicial system. The goal of this bill is to better enable litigants, the public, and the press to hold judges accountable and ensure that judges are not deciding cases in which they are prohibited by federal law from being involved. Requiring judges to file their financial disclosures shortly after their high-dollar securities transactions and guaranteeing public access to those disclosures will increase transparency, justice, and fairness and bring members of the judicial branch into parity with members of the executive and legislative branches.
